On Sunday, April 18, 2010, we went to the 3 pm showing of “Mary Poppins”. It was a spectacular stage show. Very entertaining. It was presented in the New Amsterdam Theater on 42nd Street. A magnificent theater!

Here are some photos.

Some memorable moments of the play include Bert's dancing 'around' the stage sides and top (hanging upside down); Mary's flying over the audience at the end; the 'dancing statues' (which was a not the best of substitutes for the 'dancing penguins' from the movie. We would have preferred dancing penguins over the statues.)

Left 2 photos:

This is in the lower level of the theatre, between the men and women's restrooms. Very beautiful ballroom type space.

A must see!

Left: View from the balcony. While nice, the best seats are definitely from the main floor level.

We were fortunate to get great lower level seats via the internet at about 50% discount!

Definitely worth 'googling' around to find good Broadway ticket deals on the internet!
